Long ago, in faraway Ultapur everything was topsy –turvy. Everything happened suddenly. One day the Badshah asked his ministers, "aren't we all tired of living like everyone else? Every morning we wake up and get to work. Every evening, we return, have dinner and go to bed. We must do things differently. We need a change."

The ministers thought hard. "We have an excellent idea!" they said. "We are bored because we follow the laws of nature. When the sun is up, we get up, and when it sets, we prepare to sleep. Let's stop obeying the sun and the moon!"

The Badshah was pleased with the idea. "From tomorrow everyone will wake up at sunset and go to bed at sunrise." he said. And so, Ultapur changed. Everyone woke up at six in the evening and left for work as it grew dark. The markets opened at night, children went to school at night, and they played at night. At dawn, everyone went to sleep!" The birds were surprised and began to chirp and fly around. The cock was confused when to crow. But the Badshah wanted them to try the plan a little longer.
